Would they be like the ones
we know?

y'know, the ones that protect the weak
and fight against the evil-doers?

But in all reality...

...It could be...

...a little different...

...from what we actually know.

Eventually they created the nuclear option.

But that power started to threaten their safety, so they created a more powerful, but safer method.

Instead of mass destruction, they made a symbol of power with guidance and popularity.

The result: Superheroes

Every country began to develop technology to create superheroes.

And Korea was no exception.

24 HOURS AGO

Currently in Afghanistan, the Desert Eagle is at the frontlines.

America has the Night Hawk, Torn Car, War Dancer and H19. They have five A-class heroes.

Russia only has three A-class heroes, but has far more B-class ones.

Japan and China have their own versions of heroes.

The order to kill Sung-tae was also under your discretion, wasn't it?

...Yes. Manager Cha Ji-won really loves his girlfriend and her brother...

Han Tae-shik...

is a hero candidate from Busan.

His abilities
are combustion

and regeneration.

His combustion abilities can blow up a small city and a large building.

As for his regenerative abilities, handguns and sniper rifles don't work on him.

Out of all the candidates, he's the best equipped for battle.

However,

for a brief moment, his regenerative abilities stopped. If it didn't, we wouldn't be alive right now.

The other agents think that his abilities are unstable, so they reported it to the upper management.

Also,

I saw you use
an ability of yours,
Sung-tae.

Don't worry.
I didn't think you would awaken...

but I told myself
that the day you'd be able to use your powers at will would be the day I'd help
you and Eun-ah, no matter what.

But... I wish the situation wasn't like this.

Han Tae-sung
is still alive.

If he couldn't use his ability because of yours,

then he'll retreat
and then come back.
In fact.

And Tao-shih...
